The objective of this study was to clarify the interaction between the skin microvascular endothelium and platelets before and after skin injury in rats. Skin blood vessels of rats were stained with rhodamine 6G or Evans blue, and platelets were labeled with 111Indium-oxine. The rats were subjected to intradermal injection of histamine or subcutaneous injection of epinephrine, and the microvascular leakages of these drugs were evaluated with a spectrofluorometer before and after the skin injury. The following observations were made. 1) The baseline leakage of histamine and epinephrine was low in non-injured skin. 2) The microvascular leakage of both drugs was increased at 30 min after the skin injury, and 6d1f23a050
